Instructional coaching is known to be one of the highest-leverage strategies for improving classroom instruction. Is this important investment of your district's resources being maximized?

- How do your instructional coaches know what to do when they work with their colleagues to improve instructional practice?
- What coaching models are in place at your sites, and how is the model determined?
- Do all teachers, from neophytes to veterans, work with the coaches?
- Is coaching scheduled and regular, or voluntary?
- How do your principals communicate expectations about coaching to their teachers?
- How do you measure the effectiveness of coaching on teachers' classroom practice?
